

Demotion of Clergy - New Rules

High Priest Hooded Cobra 666

January 20, 2023

Greetings to everyone in the JoS family,

With great disappointment I have to relate specific things. In no way this should be taken as a negative, but since most people look at those "who decide" to find the error, and not in those who "do the act" or the professional victim, I have to write and explain specific things.

We have been doing monumental organizational progress when it comes to the Joy of Satan to tend to your future and to fulfill Satan's Agenda, and we are nowhere near done. Infinite improvements abound.

Anyone who has not respected the path until now and the obligations they took has been already demoted. Most have already been demoted by their function, more specifically, the inaction.

Currently, all titles will have to be "won" from the beginning. Having worked daily for approximately 15 years with the Gods and having been too close to HPS Maxine, I will no longer tolerate for anyone to wear a diadem that is destined for those who have bled in it, versus to those who "Think" they have bled in it.

I cannot be told nonsense like maybe 6 months half assed devotees on how the Gods work, what their operations are, and how they think about things, as experience is quite lacking.

Further, this disrespects toiling members and the Gods alike who are doing what they should be doing. Nobody should have to listen to people that hardly do anything for them or did not want to keep providing even the minimal.

In the military or any other place in the world, you are not given certain authorities if you don't stand up for them and work for them. It's very simple indeed. Likewise, that will be here.

Alternatively, in the case of tolerating this, we run the risk of building a place of empty husks and ruins, and this is unacceptable. We are not a gamers discord server. Even there, if someone doesn't show up to do the minimum, they will be demoted.

That sounds very much reasonable. Cases where one can even return on these discord servers where kids play in even, are rare, and have to be on conditions.

So what about the JoS? Yes, it's bound to get more appropriate when it comes to positions and there will be no discourse to the contrary.

That's for the security of the community and to help everyone not have false expectations for people who cannot do what is ordained for them to do. The era for this has passed. This harms the community and it takes a careless character to want to continue to do this after being given infinite chances to improve out of this, and even more infinite warnings.

In the new affairs, you will know that anyone who wears something in this place is someone you can rely on. This is the level of performance the Gods respect.

People will also be able to be demoted, in the sense that one will either willingly be able to stop doing something [instead of we having to be harassed by their unwillingness] but also, if one doesn't do the absolute minimum to maintain something, it will go.

The same applies to marriages, corps in the land, any position in life. If you sleep on your desk then people get you out from your job. These are the rules of life and the only reason I have to explain is because most people have to actually wrap their heads around this concept as they think that this could be different. It cannot be.

I, to give you a perspective, have never been absent from JoS in more than 24-36 hours. I never get to have 1/3rd of my day "outside" of this. It's my life.

Of course, that's the case for "me", yet something should be closer to this when they wear the "High Priest" title or some honorable title, than "I care less than a person who logs in twice per month" stranger or dabbler.

We are not a charity institution where those unable should command, or the careless should be given infinite chances. If one is unable to do what it takes in a position, they step down. If one has "other things to do", more important than maintaining the pillars of the Gods, and they have it somehow reasoned in their mind, then they are not for this position.

You cannot have a mayor or a military commander that just abandons post and always sends you letters on why that has been the case, even when one is required formally to serve in a public office for the sake of the people. The only part this should be acceptable is if they have a devastating illness, imprisonment, or other very serious circumstances that disallow the mere use of a phone or something.

As a mayor or a president cannot hold office for long absence, that will be the case here. Only in very specific circumstances this will be allowed. We live in the technology era. Everyone can find some time.

I know SS who are "up there" in life and they have a life most cannot fathom when it comes to lack of time, and yet, they meditate and do their dues everyday to advance.

These positions of blessing and influence, where the Gods take care of you personally, imply that one has as the FIRST and HIGHEST priority to serve the people and the Gods, and to promote Satan's Agenda.

Then, of course, one definitely has their personal life, which is built and progresses and so on. We aren't Buddhists.

I want all of you to be ambitious and look up to those who have advanced and marvel. Nobody should have the pain of going in front of an abandoned temple and looking for a non-present High Priest, where one has to represent the power and care of the deity. Then, the temple falls into a heap of ruins, and people will ask: where are the Gods?

That is intolerable from now on. If one envisions themselves in the offices of the Gods, one must be ready to take on the blessings and power, yet the ordained life that goes with it.
