

Kabbalah is Stolen from Pagan God Thoth

In Kabbalah, the inner chamber of the head contains knowledge of the godhead and is called "Daat". In Hebrew, D and T are interchangeable, so it can be written either way. Daat is equivalent to Taat, which is the name of Thoth in the ancient world. Thoth is the God who rules the all-seeing eye, which is the pineal gland located at the sixth chakra. This is the Daat in Kabbalah, hence why Thoth is the God of knowledge. He is the God of the knowledge of the fully opened spiritual eye and super-conscious state of the fully activated brain.

In Kabbalah, the "god head" is shown openly as being the human brain within the head. The three upper worlds, Binah, Chokhmah, and Kether, are symbolically shown as the three parts of the brain: the left and right hemispheres and the optic thalamus. In reality, Jews stole most of the Kabbalah when they were in Alexandria, which was the hub of spiritual knowledge. Scholars have pointed out that the Kabbalah is all taken from the ancient Hellenistic spiritual teachings. Some Rabbis admit this as well. The Greeks and Egyptians had the same culture.

Sources:

- The Secret Doctrine of the Gaon of Vilna Volume II: The Josephic Messiah, Leviathan, Metatron and the Sacred Serpent: Joel David Bakst
- Secrets Of The Serpent, Philip Gardiner
- The Greek Qabalah, Kieren Barry

June 27, 2018

Joy of Satan Forums Contributions