

Receiving Help From The Gods: An Introduction

Oftentimes people are always alarmed about "convincing" other people, in the sense that, we have to make people see this or that.

For a specific segment of the population or some of its people, this can never happen, no more than one can teach a rock or a boulder. Many people, due to the creation of things as they are, cannot understand further. Some because they cannot, others because they don't want, and others because that's not their time to do so yet.

Specific souls are further away from what others may understand even at the first day at birth.

Regardless, many people also waste their time trying to "convince" or "change" others, but the reality is, one can only show a door and nothing guarantees anything past this.

Evoking logic or plain obvious Truth or common sense, can also fail, merely because of the notions of the human mind. Every condition that arises in the life of someone, can also affect decisions, and therefore one's predispositions to accept or reject some things.

To give a favorite non favorite example, let us focus on the categories of people whom the enemy is trying bag in, in their respective psychological approach.

For example, if a person is vaccinated, they might deny all evidence that their decision might have been pointless, since many were seeking a hope or even a quick snake oil fix to a problem. They will not sit to objectively verify if they were saved, but only after this hope might be proven false by reality that hits them on the head. Effectively for example, getting ill.

On the opposing side, people who might have not vaccinated, are seeking excuses commonly like they do in every other interval, such as that this is the end of the world, or that everything is going to "burn" because of this. They will not objectively sit down to verify if this is only fear talking, in contrast to science or what is really going on.

Between all these categories and despite of choices there will be people who will have the ability to think things through, even also while taking a couple steps back from their personal choices. This is where you sit and you evaluate.

Over the years I have also seen that despite of what one says or anything, one can only help people up to an extent. It doesn't matter how much you "want" to help.

Commonly I am asked in regards to "why don't the Gods help with this", or "why don't the Gods help with that".

For some strange reason I never understood, most people also feel on a default that they deserve this help fully, and that everything is justified in receiving any and all help they inquire. I won't comment here on the Christian undertones of this line of thought. It should become apparent to a Satanist past a point.

Let's not go very far here, just observe, have you tried to help other people or give them sound advice, only to see them 98 out of 100 times merely deny this advice and input, and continue on with self destruction or anything of the sort?

If you have, this answers at least half of your question. Only, that is a very basic level of failure in itself, which brings us to the next question.

If you have dragged people into something wanting to help them, how has this reflected into people and how many times did that fully work? This answers the question up to 80%.

A mind as confined as this, how can they really receive "Help"? And if "Help" is received as how this other person assumes they need to be "helped", will this cause anything to fundamentally change in anyway? No. We are approaching 90%.

Now, if this whole thing in Spiritual Satanism is about becoming a God versus becoming a passive person that perpetually and to no end is a consumer and taker, how would giving any "Help" change anything? Here we are on the 100% of the answer to this question.

And here is the great divide where some people might want to cross paths between Christianity [or jewish hoaxes] and Spiritual Satanism.

In Christianity, you will be given a convenient lie that doesn't exist in factual reality, such as that you will be "saved" and "helped" in perpetuity, underlying here, that you will do NOTHING in order to be saved, except of begging to be saved and thinking that you are "worth it" to be saved.

This lie might even be reinforced by self belief, but you will eternally remain an ignorant slave. This suffering will keep increasing, until it's final and when one is totally turned into a slave.

In Spiritual Satanism you will be given the facts, and how things work. The more one is conditioned in the above false example, the less they will understand, and the more they will suffer. But this suffering is only due to unrealistic expectation, gradually, this lessens over time until one becomes a free soul again, away from the confines of slavery.

In Spiritual Satanism, you don't beg to be saved. You ask for help. After this help is requested, you are expected to swim in the sea. Satanism is not for dead fish and dead horses.

Now, on the situation of "direct help". If people who are mortally here and living here, have poor power to change others due to their own self neglect, then what can be said about incorporeal entities like the Gods?

If the Gods, who are non-corporeally present here, wanted to influence these people, most of which live without a so called "soul", how much can they affect them? For how long? What is the energy investment into this? Will it hold on it's own after this investment? If anything, is it worth all this attention? Should it be done for all or to a few? Can anything with such extensively false conditioned mind be helped in anyway in the end of the day?

The answers to the above one can ponder in.

All of the things people know or think they understood about "Christianity" are false. We are talking, about everything in it. All the mind requires a full rewiring process which is equal to the path from going from ignorance to Truth, and from weakness going into power.

You must forget what you have learned all your life in order to properly advance into Spiritual Satanism.

To receive real and fundamental help from the Gods, the biggest part has already been received in the JoS. After this, further application furthers how much help one can receive. Direct help is also capable of being received, but often times it involves personal action.

Yes, you can't sit all day and expect things will get better in life. Effort has to be made to make this happen, change one's course, and conquer a lot of things. If one is not alright with this, consequences will keep stacking and they will be paid at some point, probably with a bill too high. Metaphorically speaking, if you are ok with your "payments", you will start accumulating wisdom, experiences and understanding, and you will have plenty.

The first and primary frontier that the Gods offer help from, is wisdom and understanding. The second is taking sound advice and learning, and the third is from "luck" or "causality", yet the third is actually the weakest of all types of help.

To make this plainer, I have been told by Demons repeatedly that they are summoned, then people do literally nothing at all, and while the Demons keep "Pushing" to provide their solutions, people just sit there doing absolutely nothing, expecting that anything would change.

Eventually, Demons give up until a later time where a person has better understanding or living experience. Another major issue I have been told is present is that "the mind is closed", which also relates to the psychic faculties, but also to literally being closed to receiving their input.

In effect, many of you aren't asking them for help, but to literally pick your weight up and carry it to a "destination", and just throw your dead weight there, thinking this solved anything. Demons however are rarely interested in doing this, as this defeats most of the purpose of growing you into a self-reliant entity. They can still provide this kind of help, but that is not a proper type of help.

In regards to outsiders, Demons have also frequently related to me about asking, that they have "no clue" what is going on and that they "can never be taken seriously". This post however may illustrate and give clues, as many, even Pagans and others might be confused considerably on the subject.

Satan and the Gods also advise serious meditation. Why? Because if you are negatively preconditioned, nothing can save you but only you can save yourself.

Likewise, if you are properly preconditioned and positively attuned, then fewer and fewer things can cause you unsolvable problems.

The Gods have given the largest part of their help in providing humanity through people that got close to them, with knowledge on how one can get closer and advance in this whole thing, to struggle against life and improve at it through the philosophical path.

Only if this part was applied, most people would stop asking for "help". One would ask for learning instead, but would result in indeed seeing themselves on equal circumstances to rise on top of most of the problems we encounter. One would in this case not require help, but guidance or support. From learning then, one would go to teaching.

And then, for the problems that we cannot conquer, the Gods can help us by guidance, counsel, support, or in cases of "unsolvable matters", to help us make these solvable. In the end of the day, we remain the solution and the problem, and it's up to us to decide which way to go.
